WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec., 1802. of a rare bird. On Saturday last, amid the crowd of strangers who had flooded our city to attend the opening of the session of Congress, I met on the streets a man of doubtful appearance has been the bosom friend, confident, and facmy knowledge. Closer inspection convinced whiskers had been dyed from silver gray to ebon black; his hair was concealed under a dark wig, his costume was that of a spruce parson in well dusted black cloth, relieved by an immaculate white cravat; and altogether, his disguise was sufficient to mislead the casual observer. But I had seen the sinister leer of his eyes and his sardonic smile, and I was then sure that I was not mistaking my man. He had never known me, but I had had his expression of countenance dagnerreotyped upon my soul indelibly, and I could not be mistaken. I cannot now pause to relate the interesting circumstances under which this strong impression of certain phases of his physiognomy was made, as I have semething more important to communicate. whiskers had been dved from silver gray to

of certain phases of his physiognomy was made, as I have semething more important to communicate.

Falling into the rear of my human curiosity, Ifollowed him to the city post office, where he deposited several letters in the letter box, some of which were for trans-Atlantic destination, as I supposed from a glimpse of the stamps, I still followed my game-aaw him give nods and smiles of friendly recognition to certain Sentators and Representatives in Congress, whom he chanced to meet—discovered that there was a sort of understanding between them—observed that he entered one or two private houses, the loyalty of whose inmates I had never before suspected—and I tracked him through various meanderings, until he stopped at the corner of Fennsylvania avenue and Fourth street. I found that he was a boarder there. My mind was made up at once. I called that very evening and engaged board at the same house, and was so fortunate as to get a room adjoining his. I fait sure that there could be nothing improper in becoming a spy upon a spy. There can be nothing wrong in fighting the devil with fire. My conviction was then strong, and now stronger, that my devil is something more than a mere spy; that he is, in fact, a minister of the rebel government, sent here to ongineer his personal friend Davis' measures through Congress.

On Sanday I managed, to get possession of some of his cipher writing, and by dint of close application and purseverance, after several hours, I found myself able to Interpret it. Today, while he was out, I copled the cipher of the following letter, which I have written out in full. The name attached is not the writer's real name; for the present I withhold it, for valid reasons. When I make it known, it will astonish the public that such a prominent rebeishould have had the boldness to take up his headquarters in the capital of the nation.

should have had the boldness to take up his headquarters in the capital of the nation.

Purioised Letter of a Rebel Spy.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3, 1863.

My Dran Sin: Little did I think, when I gave you the parting hand in Richmond, that I should so soon be safely and comfortably installed in my new field of labor. I have had no difficulty in passing the Federal lines and making my entry into the capital of old Abe's dominions. Claiming 16 be a Southern Unionist, and professing wondrous loyalty to the stars and stripes, I have been received with open arms. Nobody has suspected that I brought with me such a precious burden of dispatches for our agents abroad and for our friends in the several so-called loyal States. How have I laughed in my sleevest the credulity of these simple minded Union-savers!

When I set out upon my mission it was with considerable solicitude I assure you. I supposed that the office of a spy was one of hazard, and that it might possibly bring me to the gallows. But sew days of residence here have completely dissipated my fears. It is not likely that the good matured authorities will ever suspect me. If suspected I shall probably escape areas—especially after the spirit manifested yesterday in the Senats, and on Monday in the House, expressed in resolutions offered by our members, Fowell, Vallandigham, and Cox. It is true that their resolutions have not been adopted, but they have received votes enough, and have

House, expressed in resolutions offered by our members, Powell, Valandigham, and Cox. It is true that their resolutions have not been adopted, but they have received votes enough, and have been supported by newspapers enough, to render subsequent arrests a matter of embarrassment to the Federal Government. This is a step in the right direction. I might proclaim publicly that I have come here to act as a spy but that I had not yet so acted, and according to the positions taken by these and others of our friends in Congress here, I should be allowed to walk about scot-free, for there could be no crime proved upon me; the declaration of intention to commit a crime being no crime. You perceive the beauty of their position—especially beautiful in war time! Butshould I be both suspected and arrested, aye, both tried and condemned, what penalty have I to fear I Either I must take the oast of allegiance or suffer— a safe conduct through the Federal lines! Of the two, I should select the first alternative, as it would not interfere in the least with my secret service. I should feel no compunction in taking the oath, for you know that deception and perjury are among the ingredients of treasons. And we hold that treason against "the old concern" is really a virtue, on the principle that it is meritorious to cheat the dovil.

made them not much the wiser. There are a good many Southern sympathizers here. They manifest their disposition in various ways, and some of them are not very guarded even in their public expressions. They have concluded that either they will not be disturbed for thus aiding and abeiting our enterprise, or that disturbed, they will play the complex of the complex that either they will not be disturbed for thus aiding and abetting our enterprise, or that, if disturbed, they will play the martyr in some comfortable fort, and make capital for us in that way. How fortunate it is for the Southern Confederacy that the Feds. did not hang about a hundred of our peace udeocutes, in the North, a year ago!

My time is not much spent now in social in-tercourse with our non-official sympathizers here; but, since the session has commenced, I

I send you old Abe's message. You are right in what you have often said, that Lincoln is of infernally honest to be approached by any corrupting influences. If he makes mistakes, he makes them honestry. Does he understand the spirit of the slavery institution in the South, odding by his message? I feel quite sure that four opinion and mine will not differ upon that onestion. I shall labor with Herculean efforts (keep the eyes of the Unioniats blind to the stithat this war is a war between freedom and layery.

This, together with the accompanying docu-ments, will go to-night by the underground route. Our postal arrangements are now so complete that I do not fear miscarriage.

SMITH & CO., No. 460 Seventh street, where you old concern? is really a virtue, on the principle that it is meritorious to cheat the devil.

Already I feel quite at home in the Federal capital. Our friends, here, met me with open hands, and welcomed me to their hospitale boards. They had countless questions to ask about the sayings and doings at Richmond, the whereabouts of Stonewall Jackson, the probabilities of a victory at Fredericksburg, and their anticipated siege of Washington. Of course, I gave answers to their questions which made them not much the wiser. There are a can find the greatest variety of Clothing and Furn-
